Lem Moyé concludes his 'Catching Cold' series with the release of 'Judgment'

In this new novel, an ambitious plan to control a pharmaceutical industry leads to a war waged on the scientific, litigious and legislative fields

CHANDLER, Ariz. – Three intrepid souls. Three plans. With their work forced to the forefront, which one will emerge triumphant? Readers are set to find out in Lem Moyé's latest science fiction titled "Catching Cold Vol 3 - Judgment" (published by Trafford Publishing).

Doctor John Deleon, CEO of CiliCold; Meredith Doucette, ex-CEO of Triple S Pharmaceuticals; and Olivia Steadman, ex-regulator for Tanner Pharmaceuticals, independently pursue ambitious plans to rein in a pharmaceutical industry that is out of control. The war is waged on the scientific, litigious, and legislative battlefronts. CiliCold discovers the chemical language cells used to communicate with each other and how cells can produce medicine by themselves. Olivia, having found her mission in life, works with Congress to draft legislation. Meanwhile, Meredith takes the radical step of resigning as CEO of Triple-S Pharmaceuticals to testify against her company in open court. Personally damaged in their pursuit of remedies for the industry, they fight on as a public health debacle of unprecedented proportions turns their operations into a spectacle that the world both watches and fears.

"Catching Cold Vol 3 - Judgment" is a unique novel it looks into the pharmaceutical industry that is not often considered in fiction works. It demonstrates how actions taken by science, the courts, and Congress can change the oversight of the pharmaceutical companies. It also shows how people with a cause can make a difference in the country.

When asked what he wants readers to take away from the book, the author says, "That empathetic people only need vision, a solid moral compass for direction, and energy to excite others to a good end."

About the Author

Lem Moyé, M.D., Ph.D. is a physician, epidemiologist, and biostatistician. After receiving his M.D. at the Indiana University Medical School, he completed post-doctoral training at Purdue University and the University of Texas. Moyé has conducted federally sponsored research for over 30 years, including 12 years investigating cell therapy for heart disease. He has published over 220 manuscripts, 15 books including four novels, and has worked with both the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, and pharmaceutical companies. Moyé has taught graduate classes in epidemiology and biostatistics for three decades, and has served as an expert witness in both state and federal court. He served as a volunteer physician during the Hurricane Katrina calamity, and his memories of that experience led his prize winning book, "Caring for Katrina's Survivors." A cancer survivor, he is retired and living in Arizona with his wife, Dixie.
